In response to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the Office of Personnel Management's (OPM) administration of the Combined Federal Campaign (CFC) to determine: (1) the manner in which contributions are distributed among the participating charities, especially those contributions that are not designated to a specific charity; and (2) the methods used to determine which charities will be eligible to participate in CFC. Federal employees are free to choose to designate or not designate all or part of their contributions to specific charities. In 1982 campaigns, 35.6 million of the 101.2 million pledged by contributors was undesignated to specific charities. The methods used to distribute undesignated contributions have been controversial. However, beginning in 1982, OPM established a procedure whereby local federal officials oversee campaigns and one of the participating groups of charities administers the campaign and acts as fiscal agent. This procedure creates the appearance of, if not an actual, conflict of interest. To deal with this problem, OPM requires that campaign literature include: (1) encouragement to federal personnel to designate their contributions to specific charities; (2) a statement telling...
