Reviews

This publication will be worth purchasing. It really is written in simple terms instead of difficult to understand. It has been designed in an exceptionally simple way and is particularly only right after I finished reading this ebook in which basically modified me, alter the way I believe.

So the geology of Dakota coal is not exactly fixed; but the deposits, I am inclined to think, belong to the Tertiary period. MODE OP OCCURRENCE. The general direction of the coal deposit in North Dakota seems to be north and south. The seams generally outcrop along the banks of streams or on the side of the bluff leading to a valley, the direction of which they follow. There may have been a general continuity of deposit, but it seems more likely that these different deposits were made in so many elevated Tertiary marshes. There are three seams distinctly noticeable, indicating a longer or shorter period of deposition, or a greater or less activity in vegetable growth, corresponding in each case to the thickness of the deposit. The lower seam is the one generally worked, and it appears from fifty to 200 feet below the surface. The seam varies in thickness from seven to twenty feet. It is underlaid by fire-clay. From fifteen to twenty-five feet above the lower seam is another, one and one-half to three feet thick. The formation between this and the lower seam is principally of clay, with a layer of sand in some cases. Prom fifteen to thirty feet above this is a third seam of from one to two feet in thickness. This is the uppermost, and is covered with clay, sand or gravel,...
