Under the system in general operation, the Bankruptcy Court would be seldom required; possibly only in cases of fraud, or of wilful attempts to evade the law. The system would prevent persons placed in business by others, from obtaining credit upon the faith of the large amount of merchandise in their possession, against which state of things there is no similar protection to that contained in the secret Bills of Sales Act, passed to remedy a similar mischief. There would be nothing to prevent a person being started in business by another consenting to the limit of liability being exceeded; but if the debtor sought to deal with strangers, he would be under the necessity of informing them, before making any proposed purchases, that the limit of liability had...
